

Given the images below it seems that in the first simulation there is a much higher average population of prey, but a comparable population for predators. This can be attributed to the prey having less likelihood of survival if foraging together, however this has no effect on the predators.

